How, in good conscience, can the United States Government even consider Yucca Mountain as a possible repository? The land does not belong to us. It belongs to the Shoshone Nation. They have never legally sold nor given any right for the U.S. to use this land for any purpose. It is bad enough that we continue to test nuclear materials when we already won the cold war, that we continue to expect these materials with half-lives that go on for generations to just be put in someone else's back yard. It is not only unsafe, it is totally immoral. Because we desimated these indigenous people several generations ago, does not give us the right now to continue to abuse their land and spiritual rights. It would be no different to me, than the German people now saying, "well, those were our ancestors who put the Jews in the ovens...nothing we can do about that...too bad." We have a responsibility to at the very least, honor the treaties and land allocations that were given to the indigenous nations, regardless o

Thanks for your time,

Cary S. Marshall
